

The FCC anti-obscenity proposal to require stations like KCBY to record and store programming for monitoring purposes is an overreaction to an anomaly. It is also unnecessary. The FCC already has a group of watchdogs in place over the broadcast industry. They are called "viewers". If obscene material is aired, viewer reaction is foreful and immediate. Incidences like the Janet Jackson "exposure" are incredibly rare on broadcast TV. Let's use the monitoring resource we have now. It's effective, reliable and free.
